

My vacation last year was very exciting. We left on a late July morning heading off for Wyoming and Montana.

It was an extremely long car ride, all the way out there. Luckily, we stopped at different places along the way. The first place we stopped was the Cabella's in Sidney, Nebraska. Our family had not been there before. It was an interesting place to see.

The next place we stopped was in an oil mining town in Wyoming. We stayed overnight there. The day we were there, they had a motorcycle show going on downtown, so we went to go see it.

For the next couple of days, we spent them in Yellowstone National Park. It was beautiful in the mountains, and the temperature never got over 70 degrees in the afternoon. We spent a lot of the time walking and hiking all the different trails you could take to see waterfalls and geysers. My favorite part about being in Yellowstone was seeing all the animals.

For the first few days we were in Yellowstone, we didn't see any animals at all. We were starting to think we were never going to see any. At last though, on the day we were going to leave the park, we saw almost every animal. We saw a black bear, buffalo, mountain goats, antelope, and moose.

After we left Yellowstone, we headed for Billings, Montana for my cousin's wedding. On the way there, we decided to take a road that led through the mountains. It was such a gorgeous place. We went so high up in the mountains that we were driving through clouds! That wasn't very fun. It was like being in a thick fog, and you could hardly see three feet in front of you.

The best part of the whole trip was being in Billings. All my cousins had shown up for the wedding. We got to spend lots of time with them and we had a blast at the wedding.

On the way back home, we decided to drive straight home from Billings, which is a 12 hour drive. We stopped at multiple places along the way, but the coolest place was Chimney Rock. I had never been there before, so it was neat to see it at last.